Hi Kasia, and welcome. We'd like to learn what you know and what you could teach others.
Your first Take is a short introduction: five questions, one slide each. Answer out loud, as you'd explain it to a friend. At the end, you'll get a few words on how you came across.
Wozniak built the computer; Jobs made the world want it. You're probably a Wozniak. We want you to be heard the way Jobs was.
Record somewhere quiet, where you'd usually take a call and no one will interrupt you. Passing knowledge from one mind to another is, after all, what civilization is made of.

Hi Marta.
People come to me the week before they speak.

This was your most confident moment.
Why it worked: you came in with energy from the very first word!

Your first Take

How to open a talk and sound sure, even when you aren't. People come to me the week before they speak.

Stand still for your first sentence. I learned it after years of pacing while I talked.

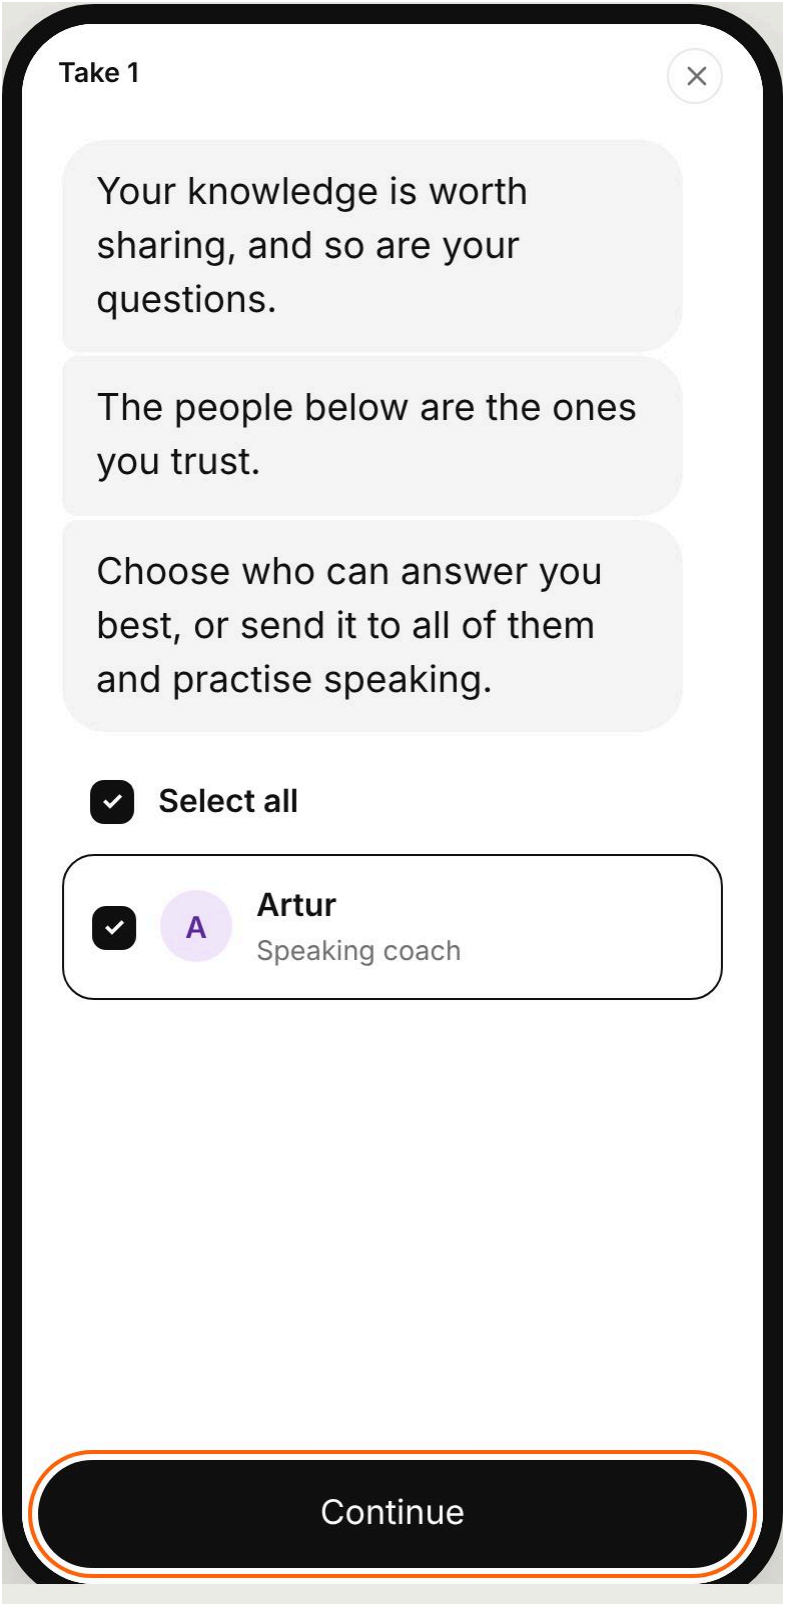

A coach who runs workshops and feels the room drift away.

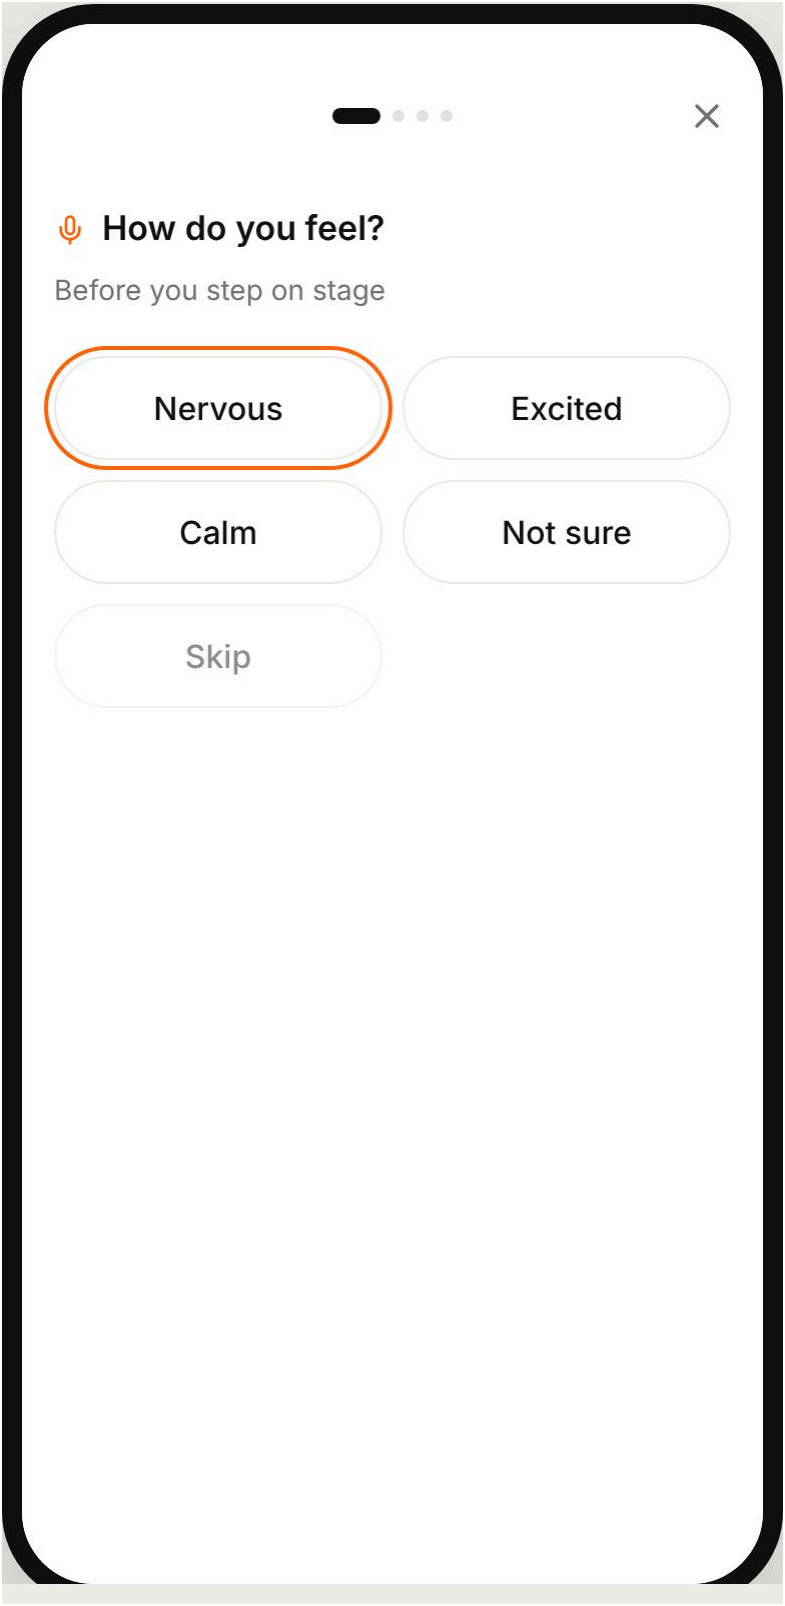

A client froze on a stage in Warsaw. One breath, one step back, and she went on.

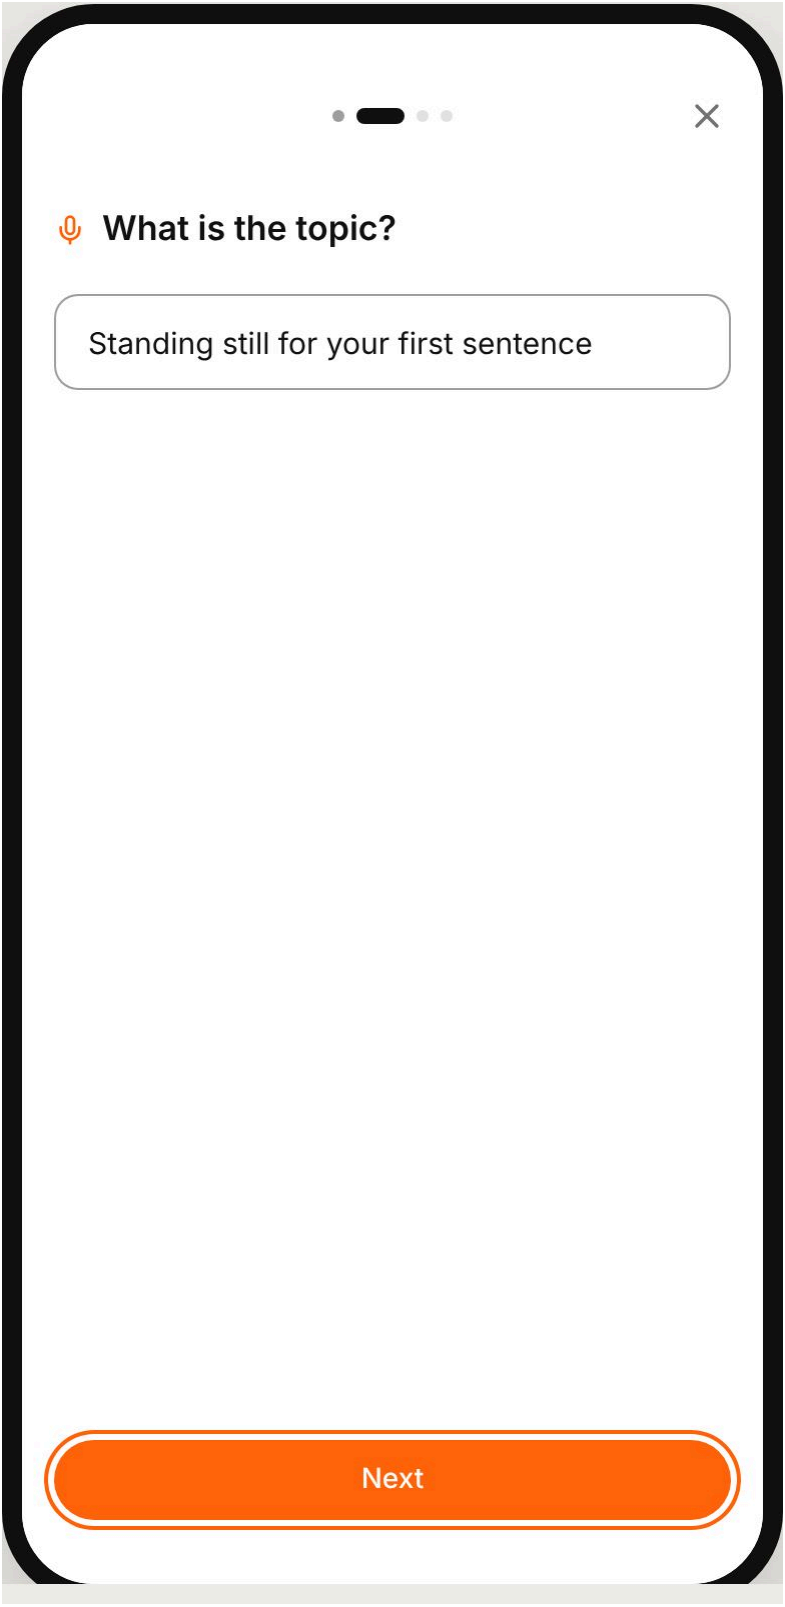

Your first sentence decides how the room hears the rest.
